ART WORK / WEBSITE COPY REVIEW

A clearer story for your event company

Current-content review and ready-to-use English copy for the website components already in the project.

Prepared from: the current website source and content data, plus the 12 service lines supplied for this review.

Scope: Home page, Why Us page, Services matrix, project preview, full gallery, contact sections and shared interface labels.

Recommendation: keep the energetic visual identity, but replace arena-scale marketing language with clear event planning, production and experience language.

Important: The project source contains specific metrics, technical specifications, response-time promises, locations and client references that were not supported by the service brief. This document flags them for verification or removal; it does not treat them as confirmed company facts.

How to use this document

Each section names the existing page/component, summarizes the current message, and provides replacement eyebrow/span, headline, paragraph, card copy and CTA text where those elements exist. Copy is written in English for direct adaptation.

01 | What the website says today

The current site presents Art Work as a high-tech creative marketing and arena production collective. It emphasizes kinetic motion design, digital campaign strategy, 3D/LED engineering, arena-scale builds and dramatic technical claims. The supplied service list describes a broader event company: concept development, planning, design, equipment, event operations, content capture and guest engagement.

Recommended positioning

CORE PROMISE

From the initial concept to the final execution, we create memorable experiences that bring brands to life.

SUPPORTING LINE

We plan, design and deliver events, exhibitions and brand experiences - bringing creative ideas, production and on-site coordination together from the first brief to the final guest moment.

What to change across the site

- Replace arena-only vocabulary with events, exhibitions, conferences, activations and brand experiences. Keep arena language only on a real project where it is accurate.
- Replace the five job-role cards in the current Services matrix with the company services supplied in the brief.
- Remove unsupported figures and hard promises such as +340% ROI/reach, 450+ arena shows, 99.4% cue accuracy, 1.2M+ reach, 72-hour turnaround, guaranteed 24-hour response, 40-ton structures and 50,000-fan references unless the company can substantiate them.
- Remove invented or unverified locations, contacts, client names, event specs and quotes. Use approved company details and client-approved case-study facts only.
- Make project cards describe the actual assignment, delivered scope and documented outcome. Avoid labeling a client project as an official showreel unless it is one.
- Use one consistent contact source for the home page, Why Us page and gallery.

> Trust and conversion: A visitor should understand what you do, for which event types, and how to start a brief within a few seconds. Specific, verifiable project evidence will do more for credibility than impressive but unsubstantiated technical claims.

02 | Home page: hero and company introduction

Current component: the home hero / Manifesto. It currently leads with "CREATIVE IDEAS. REAL IMPACT." and describes an interdisciplinary marketing collective. Supporting badges include performance marketing, a 2025 edition label, a zero-template note, and claims such as 450+ shows and 99.4% cue accuracy.

03 | Home page: replace the Services matrix

The current interactive matrix is populated with five individual job roles (motion designer, graphic designer, content creator, art director and experiential/LED specialist), plus highly specific deliverables and performance claims. This does not clearly represent the company service offer. Replace those role cards with service cards.
